

LOCAL BREVITIES.

John De Large was fined $10 by Justice Sherman yesterday, for disturbing the peace.

A Chinaman was arrested last evening for the theft of a pillow from a Mexican woman.

Sam Elder, the young man who was crushed by a traction engine against a thresher at Mesa, a few days since, is reported as likely to recover.

A committee from Company B and fire department yesterday waited upon Governor Wolfley and requested him to act as chairman on July 4. The Governor promised to be on hand.

In the District Court, yesterday, the case of Anderson vs. Fourshee & Baker was on trial. Judgment for plaintiff was rendered in the suit of the History Company vs. Ward. The case of Rosner vs. Ithaca Mining Company was heard late in the afternoon.

Mesa City voted yesterday for a new school trustee and on the proposition to levy a tax for the erection of a new school house. The trustees contemplate a building similar in appearance and size to the East End school house of Phoenix, to cost about four thousand dollars. The project is a popular one and is sure to be carried. For school trustees Messrs. Hakes and Newell were pitted against each other.

A pathetic bit of sentiment passed down Washington street about dusk last evening. It was the funeral of a Mexican child. Up in a light wagon sat six young girls, three facing three, crowned with garlands and with white dresses decked with gay ribbons. Between them, resting on their knees, was the tiny coffin. It was a sad spectacle to the onlookers, but to the bedecked occupants of the wagon it was merely the ceremony that led the little innocent through the gateway of death to the happiness of heaven.

Wives Who Read Greek.

[London Fortnightly Review.]

In Cambridge some ten years or so back, the regulations by which fellowships were forfeited on marriage were relaxed, and a considerable number of fellows shortly married. Quite recently a lady living in Cambridge and associating with precisely these husbands and wives said to me: "I can't say that I know one unhappy marriage among my friends here." But then, in the majority of these cases the wives are highly cultivated women, in the truest sense the equals of their husbands. At this stage I may perhaps step a little out of the main line of my argument to point out in what way, as it appears to me, a high standard of education among women affects their position with regard to marriage. It makes them undoubtedly more independent of marriage and at the same time raises their standard of marriage. It makes them unwilling to marry men distinctly inferior to them in education or understanding, and it also, I quite believe, makes them less attractive in the eyes of such men. In short, it diminishes slightly the probability of a woman's marrying at all, while it diminishes very greatly the probability of her marrying unsuitably. A student of a ladies' college, summing up the general results of her education, said to me: "I don't exactly see why learning Greek should make one feel it impossible to marry a man one did not respect, but it seems to amount to about that." I thought, for my part, that this whimsical testimony was the highest possible tribute to her collegiate training.

ARIZONA.

Beneath thy sky of azure blue,
I pause thy wondrous realms to view,
Forgetting every land passed through,
For thee, O Arizona!

From summits of perpetual snows,
In fettered paths thy water flows;
Thy deserts blossom as the rose,
Fair land of Arizona!

Thy precious ore our coffers fills,
And cattle graze thy thousand hills;
Thy plains enrich the hand that tills,
O generous Arizona!

Phoebus Apollo, with swift pace,
Woes thee in amorous embrace;
I feel his hot kiss on thy face,
O beautiful Arizona!

Hispania's sons in haughty pride,
The Saxon with his conquering stride,
Walk with a doomed race side by side,
O'er thee, O Arizona!

I see thy thriving cities rise
Above where a lost empire lies,
Deep buried from thy weeping eyes,
Fond mother, Arizona!

From many a temple's ruined wall,
From lonely wood and waterfall,
Thy myriad voices loudly call
Unto us, Arizona!

Too long a suppliant thou hast stood,
Soon wilt thou make thy just claims good
And of our glorious sisterhood,
Be one, proud Arizona!

—T. J. RICHARDS.

What Makes a Pretty Woman?

A pretty woman must first of all have clear-cut regular features.

She must have full, clear eyes.

She must have a skin that, is above reproach, untouched by rouge or powder.

She must have glossy hair that has never known the touch of bleach or dye.

She must have a good figure, plump enough, yet slender enough, though never suggestive of an angle.

She must have a white, expressive hand, preferably a small one, but not of necessity, if it is well kept and white.

She must have small ears and a throat that is like a marble column for her head.

She must know how to put on her clothes or she loses half her beauty.

She must fully understand what best suits her in the way of hair dressing and clinging closely to that.

A woman may have all these attractions, and unless her own personality is charming, unless she has tact, it dawns on you after you have seen her once or twice that she is not a pretty woman, but a pretty doll.

The Sameness of Society.

[Indianapolis Journal.]

Society in its upper circle is pretty much the same everywhere. At the Pappenheim-Wheeler wedding in Philadelphia the other day, it hung out of the windows, stood on the benches near the church and on the laps of pews inside the edifice, and jostled the bride on her way from the carriage to the sanctuary. It was a very select affair, only 1,500 invitations being sent out to "our best people," but so many of these people claimed admission for their cousins, aunts and neighbors on their own cards that the church was packed to suffocation, and the elite could hardly get its breath. No great harm was done, however, for the "police management was of the best," and everybody got away with their lives and most of their clothes. When a spectacular wedding comes off, "society," East or West, is bound to be there.

The Youngest King.

Alphonso XIII, King of Spain, whose full premonion is Alfonso Leon Fernando Santiago Maria Isidro Pascual Antonio, began his official life at an earlier period than most of his brother monarchs, having opened the Spanish Cortes in person at the sanguine age of eighteen months. Seated on the throne of Phillip II, in a white frock of priceless lace, he beamed upon the Parliament and court, while his tall and slender young mother, Queen Christina, dressed in mourning, stood at his right hand and read his royal speech. In summer his Majesty lives in the Palace of Aranjuez, embowered in green, and famous for its noble English elms, which the melancholy Phillip II brought back from England with him after his hateful honeymoon with Queen Mary, and some of which have attained a girth of sixty, eighty and ninety feet.

UNION AMONG THE CHURCHES

A Feeling That Has Been Growing in Recent Years.

[From the Albany Evening Journal.]

Getting together seems to be a rule not only in politics, but also in religion. In Ashbury Park yesterday, at the general synod of the Reformed church in America, a special committee appointed to report on the proposed union of this branch with the Reformed church of the United States, reported favorably and the report was adopted by the synod, only four delegates voting against the proposition.

When the reformed churches shall unite, when the different branches of the Methodists shall combine, and when the vast body of Presbyterians shall come one, then will be brought to pass new chapters in church unity for which the world waits, and for which many who are not church members will rejoice equally with those who are active Christians. The strong features of the Catholic church from its foundation have been its unity and machinery. Of these, in a measure, the Protestant churches are deprived by their separate denominations and the almost entire absence of co-operation.

There is, however, an influence which has been growing rapidly in the past three years in all Protestant churches in America, which tends to draw them together more closely, to unify their aspirations, and to enlarge their powers for usefulness; this is the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. While each individual church in its community may well serve its own interest by sectarian leadership of its young people, still, in this country and under existing conditions, it needs no prophetic eye to perceive that this general movement of all churches in the employment and direction of the energies of the young people toward church work that shall be unsectarian is a true solution of the problem of Christian unity.
